IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR LICENSEES

1. You must comply with the food safety scheme and only undertake the activities that are approved under your NSW Food Authority licence.
2. You must allow a NSW Food Authority authorised officer to enter your premises or vehicle of business to audit or inspect your food safety program.
3. You must, when requested, supply NSW Food Authority with information needed to monitor and manage your food safety issues relating to your produce.
4. All holders of a NSW Food Authority licence must review their approved food safety program annually to ensure compliance with the requirements of the food safety scheme. Changes identified during the review may affect your risk category. Any changes to your food safety program that affect a significant food safety risk, hazard or how often the program is reviewed must be approved by NSW Food Authority before implementation.
5. A NSW Food Authority licence is issued for a 12 month period and must be renewed prior to the expiry of the licence.
6. You will be sent a licence renewal invoice at least 42 days before this licence expires. If you wish to apply to renew this licence you will need to pay that invoice by the due date. The licence will expire on the expiry date if you do not pay the licence renewal invoice by the due date.
7. Failure to pay fees and levies owed to the NSW Food Authority may result in the cancellation of the licence.
8. You may seek an internal review by an independent person if the NSW Food Authority decides to cancel your licence, or you may appeal directly to the NSW Civil and Administrative Tribunal for a review of the decision.
9. You must notify the NSW Food Authority of any changes to details listed on the licence.
